California ISO's new Daily Briefing webpage, social media account New communication tools to improve information processes

FOLSOM, Calif. – In an effort to streamline and expand its communications, the California Independent System Operator (ISO) has introduced two new tools: a Daily Briefing webpage and a new Twitter feed solely dedicated to Market Notices.

The added information channels complement the ISO Daily Briefing, a once-a-day email summarizing the day's Market Notice postings. Market participants, stakeholders, industry observers, and members of the media can sign up for the ISO Daily Briefing by subscribing online.

The new Daily Briefing webpage -- also valuable for market participants and the general public -- replaces the previous "Market Notices" webpage. The new page allows users to quickly access and view market notices up to 18 months, search by keywords and subjects, and filter by categories. Users can also access a market notice archive.

Additionally, the ISO has created a new Twitter account – @ISOMarketNotice. The new Twitter channel lets followers, stakeholders, and users track postings of market notices in real-time. Each market notice tweet includes a link to the published Market Notice on the new Daily Briefing webpage.

The ISO recently launched its Daily Briefing email, which includes a summary of the day's notices, website and calendar updates, posting announcements, and recent regulatory activity. This system will eventually replace individual emails sent to subscribers. It is designed to improve information continuity, while giving stakeholders a broader view of topics and issues impacting the ISO.

For more information, view the Market Notice announcing the new communication channels.
