New California ISO website increases information accessibility & deliverability

The California Independent System Operator Corporation (ISO) launched a new website at www.caiso.com today, Monday, July 18, 2011. The site reflects feedback from site users as well as web technology best practices tools that enhance content and data relevance. The improved site also features a new search engine with advanced options that provide faster results and surfaces items that provide new data and information of possible interest to visitors. Other benefits of the new site include:

- Improved access to information and intuitive site navigation built upon easier to follow and understand content organization and categories
- More visible and easily recognized navigation cues
- User friendly, real-world URLs and file names that contain meaningful file and page names
- Easy-to-navigate home page that offers direct access to basic information and direct links to frequent-use information such as the calendar, market notices and recent documents.

The new technology behind the site may mean that older browsers will not provide complete site functionality. For best performance, please use at least Internet Explorer 8 or the most recent versions of other major browsers for the best visiting experience.

To get familiar with the new site, click on the  symbol on the new site's home page to go to the help section and the computer based training module. There are two WebEx sessions that walk through the site and answer questions.
