California ISO restructures key external and regulatory affairs teams Executive structure reorganized for improved coordination and service

FOLSOM, Calif. – The California Independent System Operator (ISO) announced an organizational restructuring in its external and customer care areas, streamlining services and realigning staff with division goals.

Under the restructuring, Vice President Stacey Crowley will now oversee the newly renamed External and Customer Affairs division. Her role was expanded to include customer and stakeholder affairs, communications and legislative affairs following the April departure of Thomas Doughty, former ISO vice president of Customer and State Affairs. Vice President Mark Rothleder will oversee the renamed Market Quality & California Regulatory Affairs division, adding state regulatory affairs to his portfolio.

The ISO also announced that Quentin Foster is joining the External and Customer Affairs division as the Director of State Affairs, where he will manage the ISO's interaction with the California Legislature and develop strategies to support the ISO and its customers at the Capitol. He comes to the ISO with extensive experience, most recently as the Director of California Climate policy for the Environmental Defense Fund, advocating and supporting environmental and energy policies in the state and around the region.
